PREFACE TO VOLUME VII

THIS volume contains the words beginning with the letters O and P. Including the Main words, to which separate articles are allotted, the special Combinations or compounds explained and illustrated under the Main words and the Subordinate entries of obsolete and variant forms entered in their alphabetical places, with a reference to the Main words under which they are treated and illustrated, the number of words amounts to 41,667. The Combinations of simple and obvious meaning, of which lists are given under the Main words without separate explanation but in most cases with illustrative quotations, number 7,203, raising the actual total of words and compounds recorded in the volume to 48,870.

These words are thus distributed among the letters:

	Main words	Subordinate words	Special Combinations	Combinations	Illustrative quotations	Pages
O (386 pages)	1,118	1,198	632	1,313	11,181	386·5
P Pf (404 ,,)	7,208	1,811	1,281	1,410	11,110	41,880
Ph–Py (896 ,,)	1,974	3,584	3,001	3,660	5,000	94
Total	30,300	6,593	4,914	6,383	48,870	522·5

Considered as to their status in the language the Main words are distinguished approximately into those which are native or fully naturalized and still current, those now obsolete (marked †) and those considered to be alien or imperfectly naturalized (marked ‖) although in the case of both the latter it is often difficult to draw the line. The distribution of the 30,300 Main words is approximately as follows:

	Current	†	‖
O	5,347	1,506	2
P Pf	5,411	1,201	36
Ph–Py	12,302	2,628	1,044
Total	23,120	5,335	844

	118
	7,208
	30,300

Etymologically considered the O section and the P section of the English vocabulary differ greatly in the proportions of their elements. O is in this respect an ordinary letter containing a good proportion of words of Anglo Saxon derivation beside those of later adoption from Scandinavian Old French Latin and Greek, and more distant languages. Among the words that go back to Old English use are the prepositions of (to the lexicographer the longest and most difficult of English prepositions the treatment of which in this Dictionary occupies 18 columns), off on over the adverbs off oft often out the conjunction or the numeral and pronoun one with its derivatives once only etc. the pronominal words other our ours the verbs ought owe own all of great interest to the student of the historical grammar of the language. There are also numerous well known substantives as ox oxlip oxter oxtongue ox-eye pack pad and important adjectives as old and open. To these must be added the words compounded with out (1,250 including 775 Main words) and over (2,173 including 1,413 Main words). The out and over compounds occupy more than a fourth of O. The words from Latin include the compounds in ob and its phonetic variants oc-, of-, op- and important words such as order and its family. Among the words from Greek are the numerous compounds in ortho-, and the chemical terms related to oxygen.

In P on the other hand, the words that go back to Old English are a very small company. Of the 23,000 Main words here dealt with, about 80 appear in the Anglo Saxon Dictionary of which however

[1] Adding these to the words in Volumes I–VI we have for the portion of the alphabet from A to P the following figures:

Main words	Cubic	Octavo	Quarto	Folio	Columns	Pages
160,819	146,134	11,119	188	40,440	30,133	33,819	(4)

For the letters O and P the comparative scale of the work and of certain other Dictionaries is shown by the following figures:

	Johnson	Cassell's Latin Dictionary	Century Dictionary	Funk & Wagnalls Standard	Hero
Words recorded	4,455	1,883	25,875	7,009	48,870
Words illustrated by quotations	3,061	1,337	5,078	2,119	38,536
Number of illustrative quotations	12,111	9,642	20,340	3,243	175,130

The quotations in Richardson's Dictionary in O and P are 9,640.

o were borrowings from Latin leaving only about 30 really native most of them found in other Germanic languages Among the chief of these are pin path penny pith play, plight, plough pock pool pretty prick puff pull put Of these the two last scarcely appear in Old English but have since become verbs of great importance the article PUT is after GO the longest as yet in the Dictionary and has proved one of the most difficult From causes stated in the article on the letter P, this was the rarest initial consonant in Old English occupying in Bosworth Toller's Anglo Saxon Dictionary only one-fifth of the space of O But its constant accessions from other languages, and apparently its aptitude to form onomatopoeic words have made it in the modern dictionary next in compass to S and C with which it forms a third of gigantic letters containing together considerably more than a fourth of all the words in the language The accessions began with the 50 words from Latin already mentioned some like pil pit and print of West Germanic age but most of them only pre Conquest English either ecclesiastical, as pall pope priest prime or nam of foreign plants and animals as parsley pear, pease pepper pea(cock) The accessions continued with the words from Old French in origin mostly Latin and subsequently with words formed directly from Latin (sometimes ultimately from Greek) and also from the 16th century in the terminology of philosophy and science from Greek directly From the 16th century words began to crowd in from other European and more distant tongues until now there are to be found in the P division of this volume representatives of more than 50 languages To these have been added a considerable number of words of unknown origin many no doubt onomatopoeias of English or its dialects The compass of the letter has been greatly enlarged by the words formed with the Latin prefixes per post-, pre pro (with its Old form por) and with the Greek prefixes pan- peri- pro-, and the formatives pan-, para- phil- phon- pseud- psych- etc The words in PH are an alien group representing (with few exceptions) Greek words in which Roman spelling substituted PH and which thus come in between PE and PI at once to swell the vocabulary and to increase its Greek elements Of the 23 000 Main words in PH nearly "900—more than one third of the whole — are of Greek derivation or are formed with a Greek prefix or first element PH is a proportion much larger than obtains in the language as a whole

The material collected up to 1888, for O to ON was arranged chronologically and in part sub edited by Miss Margaret Hutt, of Thurhill Stirlingshire (now Mrs Alexander Stuart) The section OO to OPPRO BRIUM was skilfully sub edited by the late Rev W J Lowenberg of Starkies Bury 1887 96 who died in 1899 before seeing any part of O in type The section OPTICIAN to OW was sub edited 1894 6 by Mr James Bartlett of Cloverlea Bramley Guildford who after more than 20 years voluntary work at the Dictionary during which he sub edited also G parts of M R and S died on 15 August 1908 The very technical section from ON to OZ was arranged and sub edited by Mr H A Nesbitt B A in 1894 For PA the material collected by the Philological Society had in consequence of the death of the person who undertook its sub editing been nearly all lost or destroyed It had in consequence to be collected anew which was largely done by the late Mr L S Jackson M A Aldymouth as it accumulated, it was arranged, and finally sub edited 1888 by the late Miss J H A Brown of Chichester The slips for PI to PELY were sub edited in 1884 by Mr James Britton F R S those for PEM to PILRI by Mr R M Lintock, of Liverpool in 1888, and 1893 6 and those for PERS to PIL by Mr W J Anderson then of Markinch who died in February 1900 The large section PIN to PLOP was laboriously sub edited by Miss J E A Brown one of the most devoted and enthusiastic of our volunteer helpers between 1900 and her sudden death on 19 February 1907 Her work was ably continued PROFIT to PRY by the late Mr C B Winchester in 1908 The earlier material for PR to PU had been put in order by the late Mr P W Jacob in 1885 The whole section HE to PHY was revised with much new material 1901–4 by our valued coadjutor the Rev C B Mount M A, who also sub edited with much original research, the last section HS to HYMS in 1904 7 The generous and in many cases long continued services of these voluntary collaborators, so few of whom alas survive call for the fullest and most grateful recognition

In the revision and improvement of the work in the proof stage continuous and indefatigable help has been rendered by Misses L P and Edith Thompson of Lansdown Bath, whose investigations of the sense history of difficult words have been most fruitful and valuable also by the Rev Canon Fowler D C L Durham, the Rev J B Johnston, B D Falkirk Mr A Caland of Wageningen Holland Monsieur J Amos Glasgow and in later parts by Professor J H Bumby Nottingham Assistance with the proofs has been only a small part of the gratuitous services rendered to the Dictionary by Mr R J Whitwell, B Litt Oxon who has contributed to the history of legal historical and other words by special investigations in the Bodleian and Codrington Libraries the British Museum and the Public Record Office Many of our earlier illustrations for such words are the fruit of his researches Five of our zealous helpers in this department have been removed by death during the preparation of this volume the Right Hon Lord Aldenham, who had sub edited parts of C and K for the Philological Society, and had read our proofs from the beginning died in September 1907, Dr W. Sykes, F S A who supplied most of our quotations for recent medical terms died in September 1906 Mr E L Brandreth who had sub-edited portions of H K and N besides reading our proofs and verifying references in the British Museum Library, died in December 1907 Mr C B Winchester who as reader sub-editor and after the death of Mr Brandreth collator of quotations in the British Museum was the most valued of our later volunteer coadjutors died in December 1908 Mr Chichester Hart of Curraghbligh Portsalon Donegal, who added to the proofs many quotations from 16th and 17th century dramatists died in 1908

The scholars and men of science who have given their assistance in the present volume include nearly all those who have been named in the Prefaces to volumes V and VI to whom again grateful thanks are recorded More especially must mention be made of etymological and philological help rendered by Monsieur Paul Meyer Membre de l'Institut Paris and Professor Eduard Sievers, of Leipzig, both Honorary Fellows of the British Academy Assistance on points of Etymology and Philology has also been received from Professors Napier, Wright R Ellis Bywater Margoliouth Driver Sanday Rhys Macdonell Morfill Bullock and from the Readers in Turkish Persian Hindustani Tamil and Burmese in the University of Oxford from Professors Skeat and J G Browne and the late Sir R Jebb Cambridge Professors Rhys Davids Manchester Weekley Nottingham Mackinnon Edinburgh Murphy Dublin Morris Jones Bangor Professors Brandl Berlin Kluge Freiburg J Schipper Lueck and Jagić Vienna Murko and Strekelj Graz Derocquigny Lille Dr A Kluyver Leiden Sir Ernest Satow, K C B Dr G A Grierson C I E Camberley Dr A Souter Oxford Mr James Platt junior On points of History Archaeology and Law from Professors C H Firth Goudy Holland Vinogradoff Oxford, the late Professor F W Maitland Cambridge Professor F Liebermann Berlin the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records Sir F Pollock Bart Miss Edith Thompson and Dr R R Sharpe of the Guildhall Mr Thomas Hunter Town Clerk of Edinburgh G J Turner Esq (Local Pushau) G Holden All Souls Library on Numismatics from Dr Barclay V Head and H A Grueber F S A on Military terms from Major H A Adair Captain C S Harris Major J H Leslie Colonel F J B Loraine on Naval terms from Sir J K Laughton M Oppenheim Mr Oswyn A R Murray of the Admiralty, on the history of Philosophical terms from Messrs C C J Webb Magdalen College and R R Marett Exeter College on the history and definition of Mathematical terms from the late Dr C Taylor Master of St John's Cambridge Dr Gow of Westminster School Professor Elliott and Mr C Leudesdorf Oxford on terms of Physics from Professors Silvanus P Thompson R B Clifton A E H Love on Astronomical terms from Mr W H Wesley of the Royal Astronomical Society and Dr Dreyer of Armagh on Medical terms Bacteriology etc from Sir T Clifford Allbutt M D Professors Osler Ritchie Gotch Georges Dreyer and Dr F H Dyer Smith on the history of Chemical terms from Sir H Roscoe Dr W R Dunstan and Mr H Robinson of the Imperial Institute Messrs H Hartley N Sidgwick and A E Walden Oxford on Geology and Mineralogy from Sir A Geikie, J J H Teall, F R S Professor J McKenny Hughes Dr H A Miers F Fletcher F R S Dr John W Evans (Plumbago) and the late Professor Albert H Chester of Rutgers College U S A on Zoology and Biology from the late Professor Alfred Newton Professor A Sedgwick and Dr S F Harmer Cambridge Dr W Hatchett Jackson Professors Bourne and Poulton and Mr J W Jenkinson Oxford the Director of the Natural History Museum South Kensington, Dr A Gunther and others on Botany etc from Professor Vines Oxford the late and present Directors of the Royal Gardens Kew and members of their staff and Dr B Daydon Jackson on terms of Finance etc from successive secretaries of the Bank of England the late Lord Aldenham the Hon Vicary Gibbs on certain Parliamentary terms from the Right Hon Lord Peel and Sir Courtenay P Ilbert on the words Oil and Petty from Professors A C Bradley and J Mackail on Jewish terms from Dr H Gollancz on terms of Architecture Engineering and Lighthouses from Mr Alexander Beazeley C E a constant helper for many years and contributor of more than 30 000 quotations who died on 1 December 1903, on Printing terms from Mr Horace Hart M A, on Boating terms from Rev W F Sherwood on Chess terms from H J R Murray M A on terms of various Arts and Industries from Professor Beaumont Leeds Messrs Herbert Congreve M Inst C E H O Greener R Oliver Heslop R A Macaulay Julian A Osler the Royal Worcester China Works the Manager of Tangyes Ltd etc on other special points from Mr W Pailey Baildon Rev Andrew Clark M A Dr E J Scott Messrs John Dormer John Hodgkin, A Taylor Innes A E Leach M A H Littlehales F Madan, M A A T Robbins W L Rushton, and many others For words connected with American colonial state, and federal history, invaluable contributions have been made by Mr Albert Matthews of Boston, as also on American subjects by the late Mr W F Garrison and Mr C W Ernst of Boston (who has besides supplied many early instances of medieval Latin words) Assistance has been rendered also by Dr Warner Dr Fortescue Mr John A Herbert and other officers of the British Museum by Bodley's Librarian, Dr Jenkinson University Librarian Cambridge the late and present Keepers of the Advocates' Library Edinburgh, the Librarian of the Patent Office London the Librarians of the Congress

Obstinative, sb. An obstinate tendency.—1561 T. HOBY tr. Castiglione's Courtier (1577) 1 Diijl. And of these errors there are diuers other causes and among other the obstinatiues of princes.

† Obtund, v. Obs. trans. To make dull of hearing; deafen.—1639 J. WELLES Soules Progr. 109 Old age dimmed with blindness, obsurded with deafness.

Occupable, a. rare. Capable of being occupied.—1851 WHEWELL Lect. Univ. Teach. I. 256 In things which are properly no one's, two things are occupable, the lordship and the ownership.

Octagonian, a. Earlier example.—1598 [see HEXAGONIAN].

Ogive Early example.—1357 8 Ely Sacr. Rolls 1907 II. 180 In iij pedibus de oggifs empt. per Jerle upd. ob. 16s. 4d.

Okapi (okapi. African) A quadruped allied to the giraffe discovered by Sir Harry Johnston in 1900.—1901 RAY LANKESTER in Times 18 June 2/3 After an examination of the skulls I am of opinion that the Okapi (the native name by which the new animal is known) must be placed in a new genus.

Omnium, 1, Omnium gatherum Quot. 1775 should be dated 1761.

Otherkin Delete quot. a. 1275, which reads Ypre cunne.

Package 1. Earlier example.—1540 in Trans. Exeter Council (1837) VII. 48 Certain lede ... was stayed at London by the packer for lack of payment of package money.

Pagan Etymol. The explanation of L. pāgānus in the sense not Christian, heathen, as arising out of that of 'villager, rustic', given by Orosius (a Span. ard) 417, has been shown to be chronologically and historically untenable, for this use of the word goes back to Tertullian 202, when paganism was still the public and dominant religion, and even appears according to Lanciani in an epitaph of the 2nd cent. The explanation is now found in the use of pāgānus as = 'civilian, non-militant', opposed to miles 'soldier: one of the army'. The Christians called themselves milites 'enrolled soldiers of Christ, members of his militant church, and applied to non-Christians the term applied by soldiers to all who were 'not enrolled in the army'. Cf. Tertullian De Corona Militis xi 'Apud hunc [Christum] tam miles est paganus fidelis quam paganus est miles infidelis.' See also GIBBON xxi. note.

Pamp For further evidence of this word see POMI v.[2]

Paper Earlier (in Latin context) in Ely Sacr. Rolls 1341–2 papyr., 1359–60 paper.

Parabolic, a. 1. Early example.—c 1449 POCOCK Repr. (1860) II. 533 Signified bi likenes in parabolik speche.

Parapet 3. Earlier example.—1795 Gen. Hist. Liverpool 273 The foot paths here called parapets.

O.

O (ō), the fifteenth letter of the alphabet in English and other modern languages, and the fourth vowel letter. O was the fourteenth letter in the ancient Roman alphabet, corresponding in form and value to the ancient Greek Ο, derived from the sixteenth letter of the Phœnician and ancient Semitic alphabet, ⵔ, ◇, ∇ (Heb. ע), called ʿain, i.e. 'eye'. The latter represented a peculiar articulation or consonant, the 'glottal catch' (modern Arabic ع, ʿ), a sound unknown to Greek, in which the symbol was appropriated to the vowel o (which the sound of Semitic ʿain in conjunction with a may have somewhat resembled). In early Greek, O was used for both short and long o, subsequently a new symbol Ω, ω (O mégn, 'great O'), was added to the alphabet to distinguish long open ō, the original O o (now known as O mikrón, 'little O') being then restricted to short o. From Greek times downward, this letter has regularly represented some variety or varieties of the 'mid back round' (or labial) vowel of Bell's Visible Speech scale: on account of its intermediate position, this vowel is (like e) liable to considerable variations of quality, and many languages distinguish, as practically different vowels, 'close (or 'narrow') o, and 'open' (or 'wide') ɔ, the former tending to approach, and at length to pass into, the still closer sounds u, ʉ, the latter tending to fall into the still opener ɒ, ɑ.

In OE, short o and long ō were etymologically and phonetically distinct. Short o was originally both close and open. Short close o was normally derived from an original u, as in OE oxa ox, Skr ukshán, OE dohtor, Gr θυγάτηρ, Indo-European dhughətḗr*. Short open o normally represented an earlier a before a nasal, as in OE on, Goth ana, Gr. aná. This OE. o from a(n) is often distinguished for etymological purposes as ǫ, OE. long ō corresponded generally to Com. Teut. long o, in which were combined Indo-European ō and ā, as in OE bōc beech, OTeut bōkā*, Doric Gr φᾱγός, L fāgus, OE. fāh, Goth fāhēs, Gr κλαυτός swimming. Long ō also arose out of a lengthening of short open ǫ from a(n), with n absorbed, as in tōð tooth, OTeut tanþ*, Indo Eur. dont-*. hōn to hang OHG and Goth hāhan from OTeut hanh*, χαγχ-. Long ō was probably originally both close and open, but in late OE it must, from its subsequent history, have been close. In unstressed syllables, o was the ordinary OE representative of the obscure vowel (ə), and in this capacity it often varied with a, e, u.

In the Middle English period the distinction between open and close short o is no longer discernible; and the vowel was apparently always open before a consonant in the accented syllable. Of long ō ME. had two distinct sounds, open and close. Open ō was the normal representative (in midland and southern speech) of OE. long ā (or lengthened a), which passed through the sound of (ǭ) to that of (ō), being sometimes written in the 13th c. oā, but, eventually, simply o, or oo thus OE. mōna, nāh, ald (aald), ME. moone, noon (1287), more, noo, old. It often represented long ō derived from Fr or L. or arose out of an earlier short o in an open syllable, as OE hopa, ME hope ME. close o represented OE. ō. This ō must have been a very close sound, for about the end of the ME. or beginning of the mod. Eng. period it passed into the sound of (ū), usually with the spelling oo, though sometimes with the simple o spelling, as in the words do, to, lose. MF. open ō either continued into mod. Eng. as o (bone, ōr, hope), or was, from 16th c., written oa (oak, oar, coal), but in sound it became at length close and quasi-diphthongal (ōu), except before r, where it remains open (ōɹ). In the 13th c., o began to be written in certain cases for u, esp. before m, n, v (= v), as in some, son, love (= luve), OE sum, sunu, lufu. This, which has largely survived into mod. L., was merely a graphic, not a phonetic change. The normal sound of short o is now (ǫ) low back round, varying with mid back round wide (o), and low back round wide (ɒ), but it frequently stands for (ʌ), as in son, cloth, or (ə), as in word, and in unaccented syllables sinks to (ə), as in nation. When original short o comes before r final, or r + consonant, as in or, lor, corn, sort, it is now lengthened into the corresponding long sound ǫ ǫɹ, ǫɹt, kǫɹn, sǫɹt). A still more recent lengthening of ǫ often takes place in southern English before certain consonants, as in cross, off, moth, soft, and, being as yet only partially recognized, is here represented by ɔ.

The normal sound of long ō, as in no, toe, bone, is the quasi- or imperfect diphthong (oʊ), but before r, as in bore, choral, story, the sound is that of the open quasi diphthong (oɹ). In London and the south of England, this ō, esp. when r follows in the same syllable, as in ore, worn, porter, is usually identified with the (ǫ) mentioned above as arising from ME. short o before r. This is not the case, however, in the educated speech of the country as a whole, nor in America, and the sounds are still separated by most orthoepists (see Ellis, E. P. Pronunciation, I. 94, 95), and in dictionaries generally, they are distinguished in this dictionary, as in boarder, border (bōɹ·dəɹ, bɒ·dəɹ), mourn, morn (mōɹn, mɒn).

Hence, in modern English, the normal sounds of o are

1	ōu in no, bone	nōu, bōun
2	ōɹ ,, ore, glory	oɹ, glōɹ·ri
3	ǫɹ ,, or, north	ǫɹ, nɹtɧ
3 a	ɒ ,, soft, moth	ɒft, mɒþ
4	ɒ ,, rob, got	ɹɒb, gɒt.

Exceptional sounds, due to special causes, and normally spelt otherwise, are

5	ʌ (u) in to do	tu dʌ.
6	ɒ ,, son, other	sɒn, ɒ·ðəɹ
7.	ə ,, word, worthy	wəɹd, wə·ɹði

No. 1 is also represented by oa, oe (final), ow, ou, oh, rarely oo, as in load, hoe, soul, low, oh, brooch. No. 2, by oa, ou, ow, rarely oo, as in boar, pour, Gower, door, floor. In broad, oa has the sound (ɒ̄). The combination oo now normally represents long (ū), long (ūe), short (u), as in moon, moor, good, exceptionally, it has the sound of 'short u' (ʊ) as in blood, flood, or of 'long o' = Nos. 1 and 2 above.

Oi, oy, normally represent a true diphthong (oɪ), as boil, boy, or an imperfect triphthong, as in Moir (moɪəɹ).

Ou, ow, also normally represent a diphthong (au), as in out, house, now, or an imperfect triphthong, as in hour (auəɹ). But ou has also various other sounds, as in soup, tour, through, you, soul, pour, brought, cough, enough, in unstressed final syllables it is commonly (ə) as in favour, pious.

In unaccented syllables, all the sounds of o are liable to shortening and obscuration, and tend to sink through ɔ or oʊ, or o, to ð, ō, ɸ, and ɔ, as in tobacco (oʊ, o, ð), anatomy (o), dilatory (ɔ), sailor (-ɔɹ), comfort (ɔ, cannot ɸ ɔ), parrot (ɔ), notion (ə), random (ə).

The change of OE ā to ō in ME. was a characteristic of the southern and midland dialects, and thus of Standard English. But the northern dialects retained ā the presence of which is instead of o, as in stane, hame, mare, stone, home, more, is one of the most distinctive features of northern English and Scotch. In later times this a is often written ai, or ae, and narr. wed to ea, e ee (ɛ ɹ, ɪə, ī). The change of OE ō to (ū, u), is also proper to Standard English and its related dialects, the sound having become in Scotch one akin to German o and u or Fr ou and u. This, like the English (ū, u) sound, is often written oo, but more distinctively u or ui, as in King good Sc. good gude, guid. The north. dialects also retain the earlier (ū for English (au), this is often written in Scotch, as in ME., ou, ow, but in modern times sometimes oo, as in coo, about = cow, oot = out.

The fancy frequent in authors of the 16th and 17th c., that the shape of the letter O represented the rounded form of the mouth in forming the sound, is seen from the history of the letter to be without foundation in fact.

-O, suffix of combining forms of words On the analogy of Greek combinations (in which the combining stem usually ended in -o, as thematic vowel or its representative, or as an addition to a consonant stem), and their adaptations and imitations in Latin, late and medieval, like Agrippha, Mix, Gallogrees, Gallobrigans, Anglosaxonicus, etc., -o- has come to be, in modern Latin and in English, the usual connecting vowel in combinations, not merely in ethnic names as Anglo Saxon, Anglo-Indian, Indo-European, etc, but in scientific terms generally, it is affixed, not only to terms of Greek origin, but also to those derived from Latin Latin compounds of which would have been formed with the L connecting or reduced thematic vowel, -i), especially when compounds are wanted with a sense that Latin composition, even if possible, would not warrant, but which would be authorized by the principles of Greek composition Such are convictio-, converso-, cyclo-, decliso-, belongo-, ovato-, albino-, tetho-, cumulo-, acceptilo-, pneumo-, dramatico-, economico-, historico-, politico-, jocoso-, serio-, etc

1. The primary and etymological function of a combining form in -o is to qualify adverbially the adj to which it is prefixed, as, in Gr, Λευκό-χλωρος 'whitely green', pale green, mod L ovato-cordatus 'ovately heart-shaped', cordate with ovate modification; Anglo-Norman, Norman as modified in England Such a comb is as it were, the adj with adverbial qualification, belonging to a sb with adj qualification, thus, as to the qualified sb steady industry (adj + sb) the corresponding qualified adj is steadily industrious (adv + adj), so to political economy the corresponding adj is politico-economic Lord Campbell has literary in the sense 'pertaining to legal literature

2. But the use of these forms has been extended, so as to express, as by a kind of abbreviation almost any manner of relation between the two components. Anglo-French, originally 'French of an English sort', 'French as established or spoken in England', has sometimes taken with the converse meaning of 'English settled in France', and commonly with that of 'English in alliance, conjunction, or partnership with French', so Franco-German may even mean 'French in conflict with German', Greco-Latin 'common to Greek and Latin', pneumo-gastric, 'communicating with both lungs and stomach', occipito-frontal, 'reaching from occiput to forehead', or connecting these parts, occipito temporo-parietal, 'including the occipital, temporal, and parietal (lobes of the brain)', gramino-carnivorous, 'feeding on grass as well as flesh'

3. This -o is used also, on Greek analogies, in word formation From its regular appearance before certain suffixal elements as -cracy, -graphy, -logy, -meter, it tends to be treated practically as a part of these elements; hence, such expressions as 'the bureau-cracy, shop-cracy, trade cracy) and other -cracies', 'a professor of all the -ologies,' 'the last new -ology,' 'galvanometers, lactometers, and other ometers without number'.

Ob , abbrev of I obiit, died used before the date of a person's death

Ob-, pref The Lat prep ob 'in the direction of, towards, against, in the way of, in front of in view of, on account of' In combination with vbs and their derivatives, the b is assimilated to certain consonants becoming o, before c, f (ob before p and qu before m (in omittère)

In combination it has the following senses a In the direction of, towards, facing, in front of, as obvertère to turn towards, obvibre to listen to b Against, in opposition, as occurrère to run against, oppugnère to place against often merely implying the notion of objection, as objectio character of an action c Upon or over, down upon, down, as obtuchre to draw upon or over obscure to bind down, occudère to fall down d Completely, sometimes pleonastic, as obtulit as, to sweeten (completely oldurare to harden greatly, often with a colouring of sense a

In English use, ob (or of or o) occurs

I In words already formed in Latin in the senses above mentioned, rarely words formed in Eng itself on Latin elements e g a obedience, obversion, b obje t, occur, opponent, opposite, c obduce, accident, d obdulcorate, obturate

2 In mod scientific Latin, and hence in Eng , in Botany, etc , ob is prefixed to adjs in the sense 'inversely', or 'in the opposite direction', e g obcordatus (Linnæus), obcordate, 1 e cordate with the base or broad end presented , obovate, ovate or egg shaped with the wider end presented ; obtriangular, triangular with the apex downward. See below Obclavate to Obturbinate

This is not an ancient L. use, where ob- was rarely combined with an adj, the chief example being obhngus Oblong, which could hardly be in sense the model for these words Apparently the prefix represents the ob- of the adv obverse Oppositely and is an abridged representation of that word

1 obeïr, like I obedire, is an intransitive verb, construed with a dative pronoun, or the prep. à je lui obéis, nous obéissons au roi, aux lois When the vb was taken into Eng, the dative and accusative were already levelled under the common accusative, and the passive in the Eng construction was either with a simple object, representing the dative, or with the preposition to the vb being thus syntactically, either trans or intr, in the same sense The const with to has now become obsolete, and that with the simple object survived, an intrans use, e g 'to obey is better than sacrifice', is now felt as an absolute use of the transitive The trans construction is here taken first, but it is to be remembered that the object was orig. a dative]

2 Philos Used of the existence or nature of a thing as an object of consciousness (as distinguished from an existence or nature termed subjective)

The Scholastic Philosophy made the distinction between what belongs to things subjectively (subjective), or as they are in themselves and what belongs to them objectively (objective) as they are presented to consciousness. In later times the custom of considering the perceiving or thinking consciousness as per emi nently the subject' has made a different use of these words, which now prevails in philosophical language A coding to this what is considered as being going to the perceiving or thinking self is called subjective, and what is considered as independent of the perceiving or thinking self is called in contrast objective As to this transition of use (which primarily concerns the words subjective and objective as its antithesis) resulting in what is almost an exchange of sense between the two adjectives see HAMILTON Metaph II 80 ff 808 note, R L. NETTLESHIP Philos Teet & Rem 213

† a Opposed to subjective in the older sense = 'in itself' Existing as an object of consciousness as distinct from having any real existence, considered only as presented to the mind (not as it is, or may be, in itself or its own nature) Obs

[c1325 OCCAM Sent 1, Dict 2 qu 8 E, Universale non est aliquid reale habens esse in actualium nec in anima nec extra animam, sed tantum habet esse objectivum] Quicquid est est qu dam fictum habens esse tale in esse objectivo, quale habet res extra in esse subjectivo]

They are, therefore, such as we see and perceive them Their real and objective natures are, then, like the same

b Opposed to subjective in the modern sense That is or belongs to what is presented to consciousness, as opposed to the consciousness itself, that is the object of perception or thought, as distinct from the perceiving or thinking subject, hence, that is, or has the character of being, a 'thing' external to the mind, real

This sense is occasional in writers of the later 17th and early 18th c (the early example being in a re or less transitional) but is current use appears to be derived from Kant and to appear in Eng subsequently to 1797, chiefly after 1817 (see quot from C Ledridge)

2 One of the main areas or regions into which this body of water is divided geographically

These divisions are partly natural, through the intervention of portions of land, partly arbitrary for geographical convenience It is usual to reckon five of them, the Atlant Pacific, Indian Arctic and Antarctic Oceans, of which the first two are sometimes subdivided into Northern and Southern But the Pacific, Indian, and Antarctic really form one great ocean, the 'South Sea' of which the Atlantic and Arctic again form a smaller prolongation, divided from the larger basin only by an imaginary line drawn between the southern points of Africa and America. The name ocean was formerly given to smaller portions of some of these the North Sea has still the synonym German Ocean

Oddfe llow, Odd - fellow. [A fanciful appellation cf Odd a 9 b] A member of a society, fraternity, or 'order', organized under this name, with initiatory rites, mystic signs of recognition, and various 'degrees' of dignity and honour, for social and benevolent purposes, especially that of rendering assistance to members in sickness, distress, or other need

The name 'Odd Fellows appears to have been originally assumed by local clubs formed in various parts of England during the 18th c. for convivial and social purposes usually with rites of initiation passwords and secret ceremonies, supposed to imitate those of Freemasonry. Associations of these clubs were formed from time to time for purposes f mutual re gulation of which that styled the Independent Order f Oddfell w of Manchester Unity, formed about 18 has grown into a vast organization having local branches or lodges throughout Great Britain and the Colonies, as well as in the United States and some f. foreign countries. Besides this there are numerous smaller societies of the same order in Great Britain and the Colonies a distinct federation also exists in the United States which beginning in 1819 in connexion with the Manchester Union separated fr m it in 1842 and is now a great and important organization

1811 Ivy Bal Odd Fellows a convivial society the introduction to the most noble gra nd marque in royal rol es, is well worth seeing at the price of be ing a member

Odds (*ǫ*dz), sb Also 6–7 odde, ods, (6 Sc oddis, odis, 7 odd's, pl oddses). [app pl of Odd a taken subst cf news In 16thc regularly, and in 17th and 18th c usually, construed as a singular, 'the odds is or was', an isolated instance of 'the odds were' appears in 1654, but this construction is unusual before the 19th c

It is somewhat difficult to c mprehend how the plural of odd came to be taken to express the sense difference, and also how a word originally plural should, while still retaining the plural form have been so constantly viewed and construed as singular The most likely explanation is that odds, odds first meant odd or unequal things (cf news = 'new things or matters') a relic of which appears to exist in the phrase to make odds even found in the earliest quotation But the notion of two odd or unequal things so essentially involves that of the relation between them as easily to pass into that of inequality or difference, as it perhaps already did in the phrase in question which is fully developed in sense 2 After the sense difference' was once established the plural character of the word might be lost sight of, the more easily in that sense no singular was in use, nor from the suggested origin possible We may compare the history of news, means trace

1 a In reference to ancient literature (and in some early uses of the word in English) A poem intended or adapted to be sung, e g the Odes of Pindar, of Anacreon, of Horace Choral Odes, the songs of the Chorus in a Greek play, etc. b In modern use A rimed (rarely unrimed) lyric often in the form of an address, generally dignified or exalted in subject, feeling, and style, but sometimes (in earlier use) simple and familiar (though less so than a song)

It rarely extends to 150 lines and some poems so named are quite short though prob the name would not now be given to such The metre in longer odes is usually irregular e.g Dryden Alexander s Feast Wordsworth Intimations of Immortality) or consists of stanzas regularly varied (Gray s Pindaric Odes) but in shorter odes, sometimes of uniform stanzas (Gray s shorter ode)

Oe, another form of Oy Sc, grandson

Oe, obs. variant of O sb 1, O adj one, O vb

Œ (in the earliest times, and now often, written separately oe) was in Early Old English the symbol of the i-umlaut of ā, o, as in fæt, foet, soccan, āhtan, ōhtan, doubtless originally sounded like Ger ö, o, but afterwards written (and sounded) simply e, a, in which form it came down into Middle English

In modern Eng œ, oe reproduces the usual L spelling of Gr οι, which often in med L., and in Romanic, was treated like simple ē In words that have come into Eng through med L. or Fr, or other Romanic langs, Eng has usually a simple e, as in economy, F économie, L œconomia, Gr οἰκονομία; penal, F pénal, L penalis, f poena, Gr ποινή, cemetery, L cœmeterium, Gr. κοιμητήριον, but in recent words derived immediately from L. or Gr, œ, oe is usually retained, esp (1) in proper names, as Œdipus, Fœbea, Phœbe, (2) in words referring to classical antiquities, as œsist, Pœcile (in which, however, some represent Ge as by e, as oikist), (3) in scientific and technical terms, as amœba, anœthera, astræa, diœcious, diarrhœa, homœopathy, pharmacopœia, onomalopœa, but there is a tendency, stronger in America than in Great Britain, to substitute e for œ in these words when they pass into popular use or become familiar, e g diarrhea, esophagus, homœod. This œ, being orig a diphthong and subsequently in long vowel, is usually pronounced as 'long e' (ī), rarely as 'short e' (e), when changed to e, it submits to the same usages as ordinary e from Gr and L

In French, œ is an occasional etymological or orthographical substitute for e in the diphthongs ai, au, as in œil, œuf, cœur, when these words are borrowed in Eng they retain the F spelling œ, or also occasionally represents Ger ö, o, as (Goethe), and the o, of Scandinavian tongues (Jaroe)

Oeyliade obs form of CYLLADE.

Of (ov, ŏv, əv), prep. [OE of (3 Orm] 5-7 off (6 offe), 3 6 o, 6- o' see O prep.2 [OE of, weak or unaccented form of the word whose rare strong form was æf, originally af, corresp to OFris af, of, æf, OS af, MLG af prep and adv (MDu af, of, æf, Du af adv 'off'), OHG abe, ab, MHG abe, ab prep and adv, Ger ab adv 'off', 'away', ON af, Goth af prep and adv —OTeut aba, unaccented by form ab, corresp to Skr apa away from, down from, Gr ἀπο L. ab

The form whence the OE was immediately derived was af (as in OS ON and Goth) Like other prepositional adverbs, this developed two forms, according as it was stressed or stressless in primitive OE æf and of In historic times the stressless form appeared only in a few minimal compounds (e g a-fēnna displeasure, a-forcard absent while the originally unstressed of survived as in the separable verbal particle and preposition In OE this of began to be used also as a separable particle or adv as in I fōdde, dat inf of to fōnne, pa. pple Ā-fōdde, imperative fō of I pa. t. Ic fōde of, in subord clause þæt ic fōde] and as the adv in this position always received the stress this gave rise to a new stressed form But to the end of the ME period and often to 1600 in later both unstressed an I stressed forms were written of About 1400 the spelling off appears casually and usually (but not always) for the stressed form to which it gradually came in course of the 16th c to be appropriated (though of was sometimes used even in the 17th c) This emphatic form was restricted to the adv and the two emphatic senses of the prep which are akin to or derived from the adv (he off's 4ei off the table' hands off! has he off the money?) while the original spelling of (unaccented) prep vs, adv off remained in the ally colloq tally and in certain connexions to o (see O prep.2) remains for the weak senses of the preposition Thus of and off are now rank as different words]

General Signification The primary sense was away from, a sense now obsolete, except in so far as it is retained under the spelling OFF All the existing uses of of are derivative, many so remote as to retain no trace of the original sense, and so weakened down as to be in themselves the expression of the vaguest and most intangible of relations The sense history is exceedingly complicated by reason of the introduction of senses or uses derived from other sources, the mingling of these with the main stream, and the subsequent weakening down, which often renders it difficult to assign a particular modern use to its actual source or sources From its original sense, of was naturally used in the expression of the notions of removal, separation, privation, derivation, origin or source, starting point, spring of action, cause, agent instrument, material, and other senses, which involve the notion of taking, coming, arising, or resulting from But even in OE, this native development was profoundly affected by the translational character of the literature, and the employment of of to render L ab, dē, or ex, in constructions where the native idiom would not have used it Of far greater moment was its employment from the 11th c as the equivalent of F de, itself of composite origin since it not merely represented L dē in its various prepositional uses, but had come to be the Common Romance, and so the French, substitute for the Latin genitive case Whether of might have come independently in Eng to be a substitute for the genitive is doubtful In the expression of racial or national origin, we find of and the genitive app. interchangeable already in the 9th c (tr Bæda's Eccl Hist III xix, Wæs þes wer of þæm cynelesan cynne Scotta = de nobilissimo genere Scottorum, Ibid III xxi, Se nyhsta wæs Scyttisces cynnes = natione Scottus se wæs eac Scotta cynnes = de natione Scottorum), and this might have extended in time to other uses, but the great intrusion of of upon the old domain of the genitive, which speedily extended to the supersession of the OE genitive after adjectives, verbs, and even substantives, was mainly due to the influence of F de Beside this —the most far reaching fact in the sense history of of—the same influence is also manifest in numerous phrasecological uses, and esp in the use of of = F de, in the construction of many verbs and adjs Many of these can be clearly distinguished, but, in other cases, the uses derived from F de have so blended with those derived from OF of, giving rise again to later uses related to both, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to separate the two streams, with their many ramifications All that can be done here is to exhibit the main uses of the preposition, and to show generally how far back each of these is exemplified. It has not been attempted to classify or even mention all the vbs. and adjs. which are or have been construed with of; examples occur under the chief senses and uses, but the construction of any individual vb. or adj must be looked for under that word itself, where also will be seen what other prepositions share or have shared the same function with of

V Indicating the agent or does

15 Introducing the agent after a passive verb. (The regular word for this is now BY (sense 33), which began to come in c 1400, but of prevailed till c 1600, and is still in literary use, as a bibliscl, poetic, or stylistic enhancement, or by association with other constructions e g 'on the part of' In OE it is used this freely, but not in Fr or Lat.)

The use of of is most frequent after pa. pples expressing a continued non physical action (as in admired, loved hat ? enjoined, used) or an action resulting from a definite motion (as in adorned, deserted forgotten, forsaken) of which appr such branch II) It is also occasional with ppl adjs. in its nature of determined of Of often shows an approach to the active genitive, as in 'he was chosen of the electors' In other senses the agent has passed into the cause, as in afeared afraid frightened surprised (q v) the source or origin as in born of Eng of and by correspond somewhat to F de and par

IX Representing an original genitive dependent on a verb or adjective

Many vbs and adjs in OE were followed by a genitive case as an object or complement In Latin, also many adjs. and some vbs were construed with a genitive regulated in Prose by de These are largely rendered in Middle and Mod English by construction with of Such of these as now attach themselves closely in sense to one or other of the preceding branches of the genitive are mentioned But there remain many verbs and adjs after which of has hardly more than a construc tional force or in which it does not come close in sense to branch VIII while others, esp the adjs often approach IV closely with the objective genitive in branch X It is convenient therefore to consider them here

29 In the construction of verbs.

a After intrans vbs Many of these in OE took the genitive, and are found with of in Middle and Early Modern English, but this is now rare, except when of with its sense under one of the branches already treated instances are to reek repent, rue, beware (ong le ware) of Verbs of sense, e g feel, smell, taste, touch (still with of in dial or vulgar use), verbs of asking as ask / beseech demand, desire, entreat and others e g distinguish esteem, forget, think see e, formerly construed with of, now has a simple object, some as accept admit, allow approve, conceive, recollect, remember, still have both constructions, with others, as hope, look, thirst, wait, etc of has been displaced by for or some other preposition

b After transitive vbs, the secondary or thing object is often introduced by of representing an original genitive Such are balk, charge, defend, disappoint, frustrate, acquit, absolve, blame, convict, suspect, possess, seize (a person of), avail, bethink (oneself of), also with impersonal vbs, as it repent me of, and formerly with ask, beseech, thank (a person of, etc

30 In the construction of adjectives Besides those mentioned under the preceding divisions, many adjs are construed with of and an object, the following are representative of some of the chief groups Fruitful, prolific, ominous, redolent, liberal, lavish, prodigal, scant, short, sparing, capable, incapable, susceptible, worthy, unworthy, guilty, guiltless, innocent, certain, uncertain, confident, diffident, doubtful sure, aware, conscious, uncon scious ignorant, sensible, insensible, careful, care less forgetful, heedful heedless, hopeful hopeless, mindful, unmindful, reckless, regardless, thought less, neglectful, negligent, observant, watchful ambitious, desirous eager, emulous, enamoured, envious, fond greedy, jealous studious, suspicious, tasteful, indulgent patient impatient, those in ive, as apprehensive, communicative, descriptive, destructive, expressive, indicative, productive, and some in ic, as characteristic symbolic

Many of these in ive a substantive which may be con sidered as the subject of the genitive relation e g he is full of having hope of or sense of having envy, etc when the verbal derivatives and are closely akin to the objective genitive group X e g. expressive of that expresses

XIV In the sense Belonging or pertaining to, expressing possession and its converse 'the owner of the house', 'the house of the owner'

Formerly expressed by the genitive and still by some extent 1) when the possessive case (with transposition) is under The use of of began in OE with senses 47 48 expressing origin After the Norman Conquest the example of the French & of Latin had taken the place of the genitive caused the gradual extension of of to all uses in which OE had the genitive, the purely possessive sense was the last to be so affected, and it is there that the growth of the possessive case is still chiefly used. Thus we say the King's English, in preference to the English of the King but the King's head in preference to the head of England's King, which is not natural or ordinary prose English.

47 Belonging to a place, as a native or resident

This occurs in OE with the sense of origin springing, or coming from belonging by origin & property but in the 12th c. this passed into the sense 'belonging to as inhabitants or occupants living in, and so of things situated in

63 Of forms the last element of many prepositional phrases e g because of, by means of, by reason of for fear of for the sake of for want of, in behalf of, in case of, in comparison of, in conse quence of in face of in lieu of, in regard of respect of, in spite of instead of, on account of, on behalf of, on condition of, on the point of, etc see the sbs

Of-, *prefix*1, the prepositional adv OF, OFF, in comb , corresp to OS af-, ON af , Goth af , OHG ab , L. ab , Gr ἀπο , Skt apa , forming compounds of different ages

1. In vbs and their derivatives of Germanic or OE age, retained in ME , but now obs In these the original literal sense 'away, off' seldom survived even in OE the notion being usually lost by the close union of particle and verb, having usually undergone a modification, extension, or transference of meaning, in which the original sense of the elements, esp of the particle, was obscured or lost Examples ofhold to hold from, withhold, ofaske to put away a charge, deny, ofthink to displease, grieve, ofask to ask for, get by asking, ofclepe to call for, ofsend to send for Of- frequently added to the verbal notion that of 'to do away with, finish off, destroy, kill', as in ofslay, ofsting, ofstead, of 'to injure, hurt', as in ofsie, ofset, ofsit, of 'to outdo or overcome', as in ofride ofrun Closely allied to this is the sense, in participial adjectives, of 'overcome or exhausted with the action expressed by the vb', as in ofaken, ofsought, ofhungered, ofthirst Words of this class which came down into Mᵉ will be found in their alphabetical places

In ME of before a cons was frequently reduced to o- a and thus identified in form with several other prefixes of different origin see A prefix, and Of- *prefix*2 and cf AIDOWN, OF HUNGERED, A HUNGERED, OFTHIRST ATHIRST, etc

2 In later combinations of OF and ME. age, the sense of the two elements remains manifest, the particle being usually = 'from' The union is much looser, the particle being in vbs mostly separable, with its position depending on the syntax It was only in pples , verbal adjs , and sbs , that the combination became more or less permanent. In the 16th c , of- in this connexion passed imperceptibly into off-, which is always the form in later combinations Hence these naturally attach themselves to OFF- prep†, under which the best examples are.

Of-, *prefix*3, in ME appears sometimes to represent an earlier a OF of- being often phonetically reduced to a , there arose a confusion between the prefixes, so that original a- was sometimes expanded to of- See OFFEAR, OFFRIGHT, OFGRAME, OFGRISEN OFKEN, OFSCALE, OFWAKE (in some of which, however, of- may be original)

Of-, *prefix*4, in ME sometimes varies with ofer, OVER, from which it may be shortened Cf OFGO, OFHEAR, OFTAKE But this cannot always be distinguished from OF- prep† in the sense 'outdo or overcome' as in ofrade, ofrun

Off-, prefix The adv off occurs in combination with verbs, ppl. adjs, vbl. sbs., and other sbs In earlier times, it was written of as explained under Of-, pref 2, but such of the N.E.D. compounds as survived into modern Eng were written off, which is the only form found in recent compounds. In verbs, generally the combination is very loose (see 1 below), in participles used as adjs the union is closer, and in vbl and other sbs it becomes permanent, though combinations of this kind can be formed at pleasure whenever the sense requires In a few cases, the combination is so specialized in sense, or otherwise important, as to require treatment as a main word In verbs, the stress is now usually upon the root, in the other classes (2 4) on off-.

1 With verbs, off- (ME. of) enters into quasi combination, chiefly as a separable particle, like Ger ab- in ab reisen, ab schreiben, etc, in which the particle stands before the vb only in certain syntactical conditions In ME of was frequently put before the vb in the infinitive, as in of glide, of hew, and in this position (though usually written as a separate word in the MSS.) is often hyphened by modern editors (of-glide, of hew) modern prose usage prefers the order glide off, hew off, but in the pples. the adv is still sometimes put first, and is then sometimes hyphened to the vb (as is regularly done in 2) MS. examples are the obsolete of cwell, of quell (to kill off), of-, off-drive, of glide, of hew, of hurl, of race (to pluck or tear off), of-rive, of shear, of-shred, of smite, of-swipe (to cut off with a sweep of the sword), of hair, of turn, of thatch of vows (to twist off), of web (to whip off). Later examples are off chop, of- off shake, off-stand, off trench, etc, but these are exemplified chiefly in the pa pple, where the hyphen may be regarded as simply syntactical as in 2. See also OFF-DRIVE, OFF-LOAD etc

Ohm ² (o m) Electr [From the name of the German physicist Georg Simon Ohm (1787–1854) who determined mathematically the law of the flow of electricity (Ohm's law)] The unit of electrical resistance see quots

1881 It was in this country that the term ohmad or ohm suggested by Sir Charles Bright and Mr Latimer Clark at the meeting of the British Association in Manchester in 1861 first came into use as the name of a decimal multiple of the absolute unit of resistance convenient for practical purposes. Lord Rayleigh, Director of Electricians in 1881 the Ohm was unanimously adopted as an international standard. Nature 19 Feb 1891 388

1870 F J Pope Electr Tel iii (1872) 35 The Ohm is equivalent to about ⅘ of a mile of galvanized No 9 iron wire 1876 Prescott's Speaking Tel 49 It is convenient to use a symbol to represent the ohm as we use " to represent degrees and minutes. The symbol used by us is the Greek letter Ω Thus we say that the resistance of a wire between London and Birmingham is 150Ω 1892 Electr Electr Lectures in Lighting 3 Mar Suppl The Ohm is the resistance of a column of mercury of a constant section of one square millimetre and of a length of 1063 centimetres at the temperature of melting ice

Hence Ohmad = Ohm, ohm-a-meter, an instrument for measuring electrical current and resistance, a combination of an ammeter and an ohmmeter; Oh mic a, pertaining to or measured by the ohm, Oh mmeter, an instrument for measuring electrical resistance in ohms

1866 R M Ferguson Electr 151 This is called the B A U of resistance 1864, or an Ohmad 1885 Electr Rev 11 Oct 411 At present Dr Fleming and a few others talk of ohmic resistance to distinguish it from resistance from the reaction between the back electromotive force and the current 1891 Electrician Printer No. 18 8 Ohmmeter indicate the ratio of the pressure between the ends of a conductor to the current it passing through that conductor

Extensively used in scientific terms, taken from Greek prototypes, or formed on Gr (rarely L) words These are primarily adjs with the sense 'having the form or nature of, resembling, allied to', but also (as sometimes in Gr) abs, in the sense of 'something having the form or appearance of, something related or allied in structure, but not identical' The abs are esp numerous in Mathematics, where, in imitation of rhomboid (Gr ῥομβοειδὴς approaching a lozenge (ῥόμβος) in shape, a rhomboid) and trapezoid (Gr τραπεζοειδὴς having somewhat of the form of a table (τράπεζα)), the suffix has been used to form the names of many geometrical figures

The oils constitute a very large group of natural substances, of animal vegetable or mineral origin They are divided into three classes. (1) Fatty or fixed oils see Fatty 6 Fixed 4(c) of animal or vegetable origin (which in common with fats) are chemically triglycerides of fatty acids and produce a permanent greasy stain on paper, etc; these are subdivided into drying oils which by exposure to air absorb oxygen and thicken into varnishes, and non drying oils, which by exposure to air ferment and become rancid they are used as lubricants as illuminants in making soap, and for various other purposes b Essential or volatile oils (see Essential a 3 b) chiefly f vegetable sources (but of animal) origin which are acrid and limpid and form the chief or characteristic odoriferous principles of plants etc chemically they are hydrocarbons or oxygenated derivatives of hydrocarbons with resins etc they are extensively used in medicine and perfumery and in some cases in the arts (3) Mineral oils which are chemically mixtures of hydrocarbons and are used chiefly as illuminants.

b The expression 'x years old' may be preceded by a prep, as if it were a sb phrase = 'the age of x years' e g 'a child of ten years old', 'from two years old and under', 'at, under, or over six months old'

This construction appears first with of, which may possibly represent the OF (and Com Teut) genitive phr or the corresponding Fr phr with de (see note to 4, so that 'a child of x years old' might be orig 'a child old (in respect) of x years But there is a chronological gap between the two constructions, the earliest examples of the later being in Cursor M In one instance, the oldest text has 'o tua yeir eild', i e. 'of two years age in which the later MSS substitute old for eild. But in another instance, the reading 'of thre ȝer alde is evidently original Whether this implies a confusion between old, eld adj and eld sb, as app in the Chaucer quot which follows, or the existence of two forms derived from OE priora ȝeara eald, viz 'three year old', and 'of three year old', is not clear; but what is evident is that x year(s) old soon came to be taken in the lump as a sb phr which might be preceded by any prep, since we find c 1420 'from iij yere olde til x', and in the next cent 'at nine months old' = 'at the age of nine months'.

A similar usage is found with high, long, broad, deep etc (which also in OE were preceded by a genitive or accus. phr of dimension but there the const with of appears to be later, and that with other preps less usual see OF 39 b Oleomargarine (o lĭo,ma ɡaarin, -in) [f Oleo- b + Margarine. Often mispronounced mā ādʒərīn), as if spelt margerine]

A fatty substance obtained by extracting the liquid portion from clarified beef fat by pressure, and allowing it to solidify, with the addition of butyrin, or more or less admixture of butter, milk, etc. and sometimes of refined lard, in forms sold suitable for eating butter. Commonly sold as butterine, but now legally called in Great Britain (also in France, Germany, Denmark, etc) margarine

In U S, oleomargarine popularly oleo, is the recognized name of the commercial product the expressed fat being designated as oleo oil

The name *oléo margarin*e was applied as early as 1854 by the French chemist Berthelot (Ann. Chim. Phys. XLII 71) to a fat obtained by solid substance obtained in 1838 by Poleure and Boudet (Comptes Rendus VII 663) from olive oil, which was regarded as a combination of the oléine and margarine of Chevreul and Berthelot (see Margarin) According to the view then held, oléine margarine and stearine were regarded as the essential constituents of animal fat, of butter or the fat of milk consisting chiefly of beneutral mainly of oléine and margarine with a small amount of butyrin a dalled principles M Mège Mouries in 1869–71 experimented on the artificial production by the extraction of the oleine and margarine from animal fat with subsequent processes for the addition of butyrin, etc. Hence the name oléo margarine for the supposed combination of oléine and margarine thus extracted As further research has shown that neither the margarine of Chevreul, nor the oléo margarine of Berthelot are definite chemical substances, these names are no longer in chemical use, and oleo-margarine has only a manufacturing or commercial use for the fatty substance described above, or (as in U.S) for the artificial butter (Margarine) made from it.

1892 Sci Amer 26 Aug 129 Since 1869 M Mège has endeavored to utilize the oleine and margarine obtained on pressing animal fatty matters in the manufacture of stearine

Oliver² (p livə) [Origin uncertain]

A tilt hammer having the arm or handle attached to an axle, worked with the foot by a treadle which brings the hammer down, and with a spring which raises it, used esp in the shaping of nails bolts, and the like

Such a contrivance as described in 1686 by Plot Oxfordsh 390 A large sledg set in an axis of wood from whence goes a rodd of iron fastned to a pillet that reaches out a little beyond the anvil which is under the fore foot of the smith is returned again by three springs of holly that clasp the axis the contrary way This mention of springs of holly together with the variant Oliver in 1883 has suggested that the origin may be found in holly ath ugh the estal hshe I spelling (which evidently goes back to times prior to living memory) may be due to the influence of Oliver 1846 Holtzapffel Turning & Mech Manip 962 The Oliver or small lift hammer was used when the author first saw it, in making long stout nails, intended for fixing the tires of wheels. 1865 *Eng. Omnitude (ɒmnitiud) rare [f. OMNI- + TUDE, after L type omnitudo*.] The fact of being all, 'allness', universality, 'the all', the whole, the total sum

1839 BAILEY Festus XVIII. (1848) 329 Holding in itself the omnitude of Being. a 1840 SIR W. HAMILTON Logic App. (1866) II. 281 Some, though always in a certain degree indefinite, is definite so far as it excludes the omnitude of one. Scotsman 25 June 6/8 He spoke with accuracy authority, and omnitude of knowledge

Omnium (ɒ mniəm) [a. L omnium 'of all (things, sorts, etc.)', genitive pl. of omnis all. In sense 1, also, omnium gatherum, which may have been the original appellation.]

1. Stock Exch. The aggregate amount (at market price) of the parcels of different stocks and other considerations, formerly offered by Government, in raising a loan, for each unit of capital (i.e. every hundred pounds) subscribed.

The subscribers to the Loan are entitled not only to hold their share in the capital (the funded loan) but to an annuity for ten years, and to the right of receiving a certain number of Lottery tickets on advantageous terms. They may sell their capital to one person their annuity to a second, and their right to the tickets to a third. The value of all these interests together is called Omnium and in order to obtain a ready subscription it ought to amount to 108*l.* or upwards, on 100*l.* of capital. This difference is called the bonus to the subscribers. (Encycl. Brit. (1797) s.v. Funds)

General Sense — The preposition expressing primarily the relation of contact with or proximity to the surface of anything, and so that of being supported or upheld by it also, from the earliest times expressing motion to or towards such a position, these two senses being as in the preposition In) distinguished by the case of the word affected, the former taking, in Of, the dative (rarely the instrumental) for earlier locative, the latter the accusative or case of motion towards But the Of point of view often differed from the modern, so that the accusative was not seldom used where we should expect the dative and vice versa (See Wulfing Syntax Alfre ls der Grossen II §§ 784, 801, 821 In ME the distinction of case dis appeared, but on continued in both uses, the sense being generally indicated by the accompanying verb (e g to lie on to lay on), though used in frequently with ambiguity, to remedy which the sense of motion began in the 16th c to be indicated in case of need by the collocation on to now some times written onto, after the analogy of into

From the earliest times in the Teutonic langu this prep has been used in reference not merely to the upper surface or top of a thing, but to the front or any surface, including that of side and Du use of an aan, e g an der thür at the door an die thür to the door), this was also the use in Of But here on received a notable extension of sense, by being used to include also the notion of 'in', almost to the elimination of the prep in from W Sax and the dialects influenced by it (cf In prep) So in Early ME on will included the sphere of both 'on and 'in (sense 6 but in was gradually restored, not, however, without the survival of many traces of the former prevalence of on, thence also a difficulty, in some of the transferred senses, in determining whether the startling point was 'on' or 'in' Eventually, not only was this extension in the direction of 'in' given up, but the language has shown a growing tendency to restrict on to the upper or at least the supporting surface, = F sur, so as to correspond in use rather to auf than an in German, this comes out strongly also in the transf and fig senses in which on indicates the basis or foundation of action, feeling, etc. In Of when the upper surface was specially in view, over was sometimes used, but the notion was usually expressed by the combination uppan uppon (= up + on cf ON upp á) When in course of time, on itself came to be more associated with the upper surface, the distinction between on and upon gradually faded away and upon may now be used instead of on, in positions into which no notion of up enters (see Upon) These changes in the sense territory covered at different times by on make the historical and logical order of the senses difficult, and the following arrangement is in many respects provisional Even the primary division into senses implying position and those implying motion or direction is difficult to carry out in the figurative senses, in which the point of view has gradually changed since they first arose, so that what was originally felt to express a direction of the mind towards something is now felt as a static attitude or mental state

Oncost (o·nkŏst) local Sc. Also 6 oncost. [f ON adv. + COST sb.] a. Contingent cost or charge, 'extra or additional expense' (Jamieson') b attrib or adv. Applied (esp among miners) to work done on time wages. Oncost men (also on costs), men who work on such terms

(The oncost of a coal mine includes all the cost of upkeep, making and maintaining roads and roads pumping etc. as opposed to the amount paid for actually hewing the coal and bringing it to the surface. The latter work is paid by the piece; but engineers and others employed on the oncost work are of necessity paid by time.)

OE. an became in regular course in south and mid dial ān, exemplified before 1200. By 15th c., ān, oon, in S.W. and west, had developed (through on won, wun, woon, wunn) an initial w. The w is now universal in standard speech which only occasionally appears in the spelling (see A below), but is now the standard pronunciation The first orthoepist to refer to it was Jones 1701 earlier grammarians, down to Cooper 1685, give to one the sound that it has in alone, atone, and only. Dyche in 1710 has (on) beside (wun). In the north, ān was early reduced to a, but through the narrowing of orig long ā to (ǣ, ē, ē̆o, ie, 19) ān has sunk in dialectal utterance through ane, to eane, ean, yan, yen, the development of (yen) in the north being the counterpart of that of (won) in the south In OE, ān had the full adj inflexions, definite and indefinite, remains of which persisted in the south to c 1300, and in Kent still later (see A 6), but, in mid and midl. Eng., the uninflected ān, on, with the definite form ane, ene (OE. æna, ǣne), is found in the accus. and dative, as well as the nom by 1200 Already also, ān, ōn were reduced before a cons to a, ō (oo), which did not die out till the 16th c.

In the north the separation of an and a was more permanent; at the present day in Sc. the full form ane, eane, etc. is only used absolutely or in the predicate ae ane, in the attrib. form before cons. and vowel alike ae day ae yer, ae hae ane, so in north Eng. dial. with yi and yin. From the early an a pronounced proclitically without stress, arose the indefinite article AN A, q.v. In northern dial. the numeral and article were long written alike the stress or emphasis alone distinguishing them in 16th c. Sc. both were written ane (See Anely.) Hyn prec less pos tion of adjective in pre ic ion, thet the collections thet ane that one thet a thet o be ame the tane the tone the tan, the ter. (See JAMES I Dæmon.)
